FINE CLIMATE CONSULTING

Manifesto

This is who we are

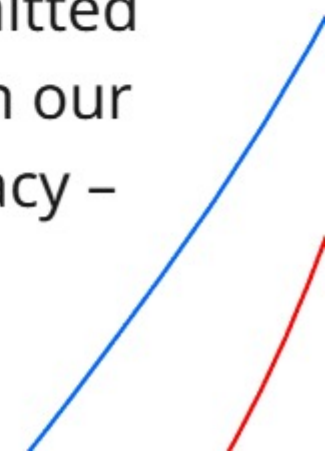

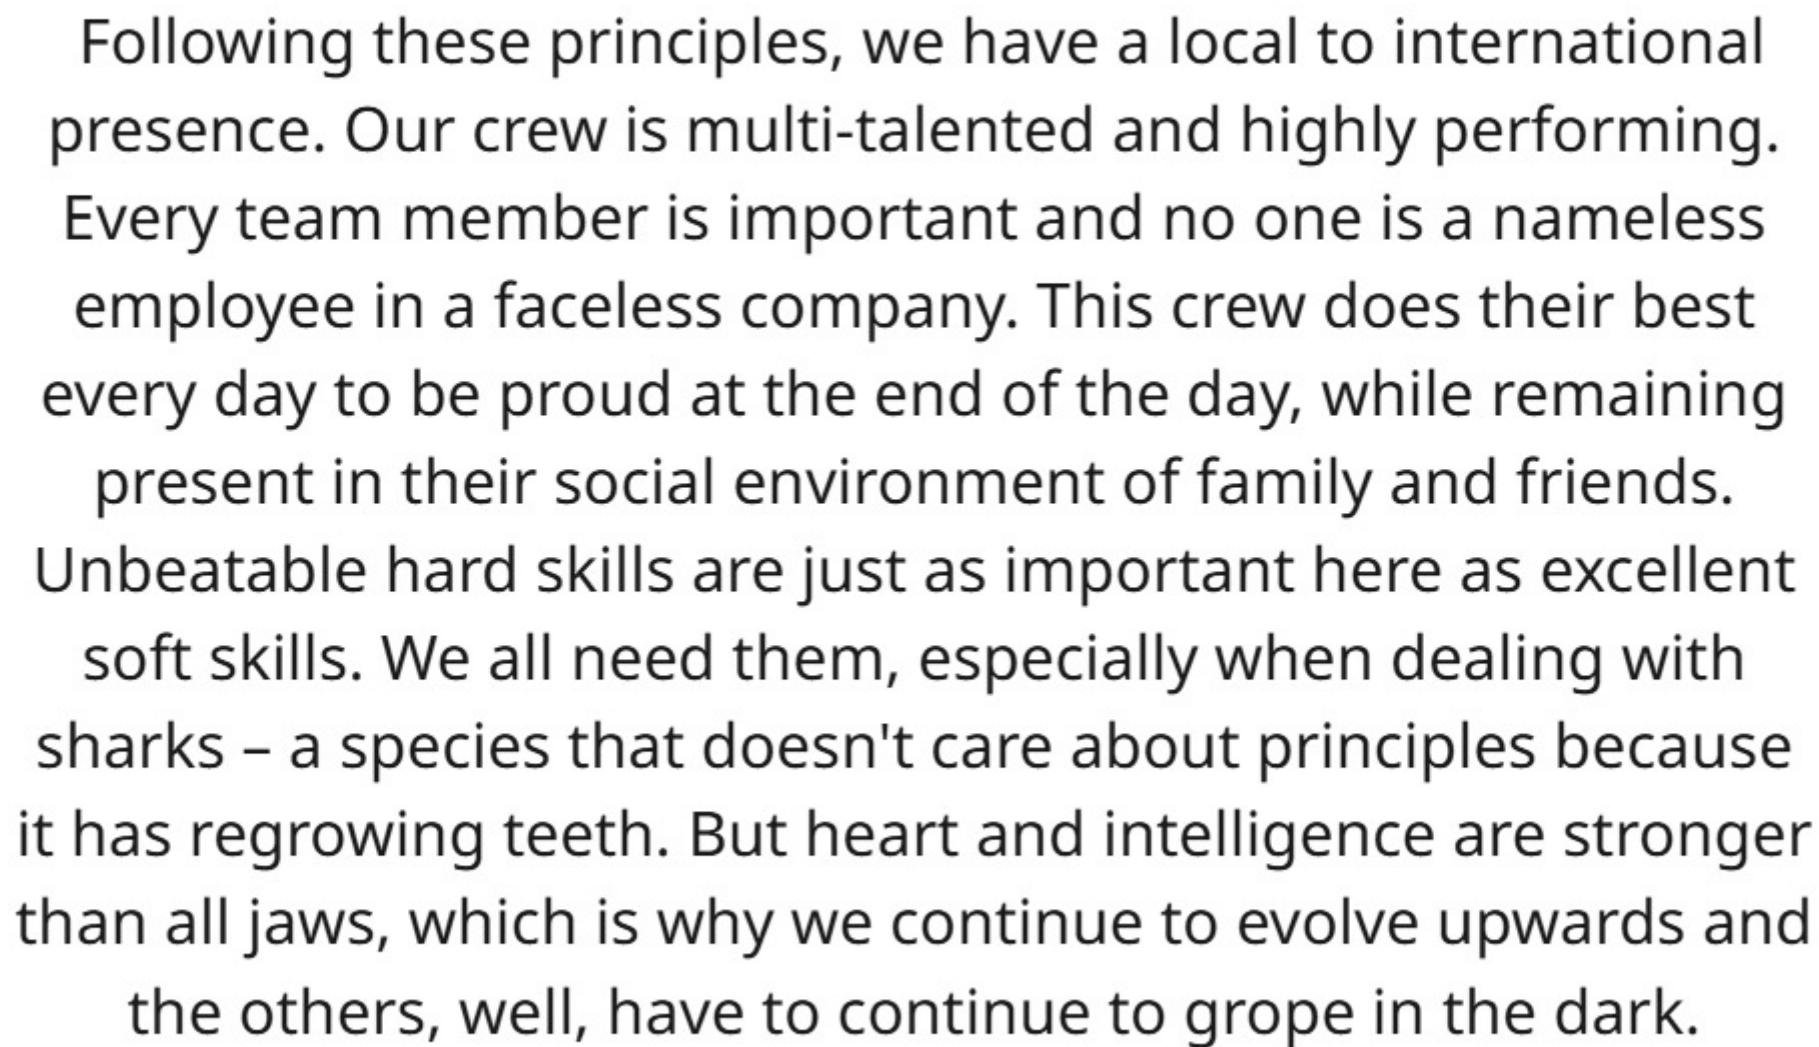

Eating Sharks Fine Climate Consulting is a top-notch and innovative consultancy for intelligent local energy systems. We are wrestling with the elements. Our expertise covers CCUS, geothermal energy and hydrogen. These areas are significantly influenced by technology and research, which is why we conduct our own research and development. The energy sector is crucial to prosperity and is therefore considered a critical infrastructure sector. Energy is not only at the core of our professional, but also our personal existence. We bring this passion to our work and our service, offering our customers, who are always our focus, the very best. Striking a balance between utmost discretion and transparency is our daily discipline.

We do not publish a list of our clients due to the high demand for our core business. As a start-up, we are involved in the wider world of business and politics. In this environment, we have to face today's challenges, which range from cyber threats to disinformation, industrial espionage and surveillance. We take a highly critical view of the ongoing monopolisation. Compelling services and products, which enabled market leadership in the past, are even no longer the primary goal. Instead, it is the ideology (!) of monopolisation that reverses and distorts cause and effect. Combined with high capital absorption and network effects, this leads to sclerotic lack of innovation and the drying up of civil security structures.

This is particularly evident in rural and ageing areas, where the majority of Germans live. We urgently call on economists to develop innovative and outstanding models that enable inter-generational care and economic growth and break with the status quo and ante. And cover both micro- and macroeconomics. We distance ourselves from authoritarian and destructive romanticism – from noble current and from Marx to Friedman. We call on political decision-makers to immediately ensure the long-term existence of society in a future worth living. None of this is easy, but nothing valuable has ever come from convenience. As a start-up, we are fully committed to this cause and want to make a valuable contribution in our field. Our guiding principles are those of liberal democracy – humanity's greatest political invention.

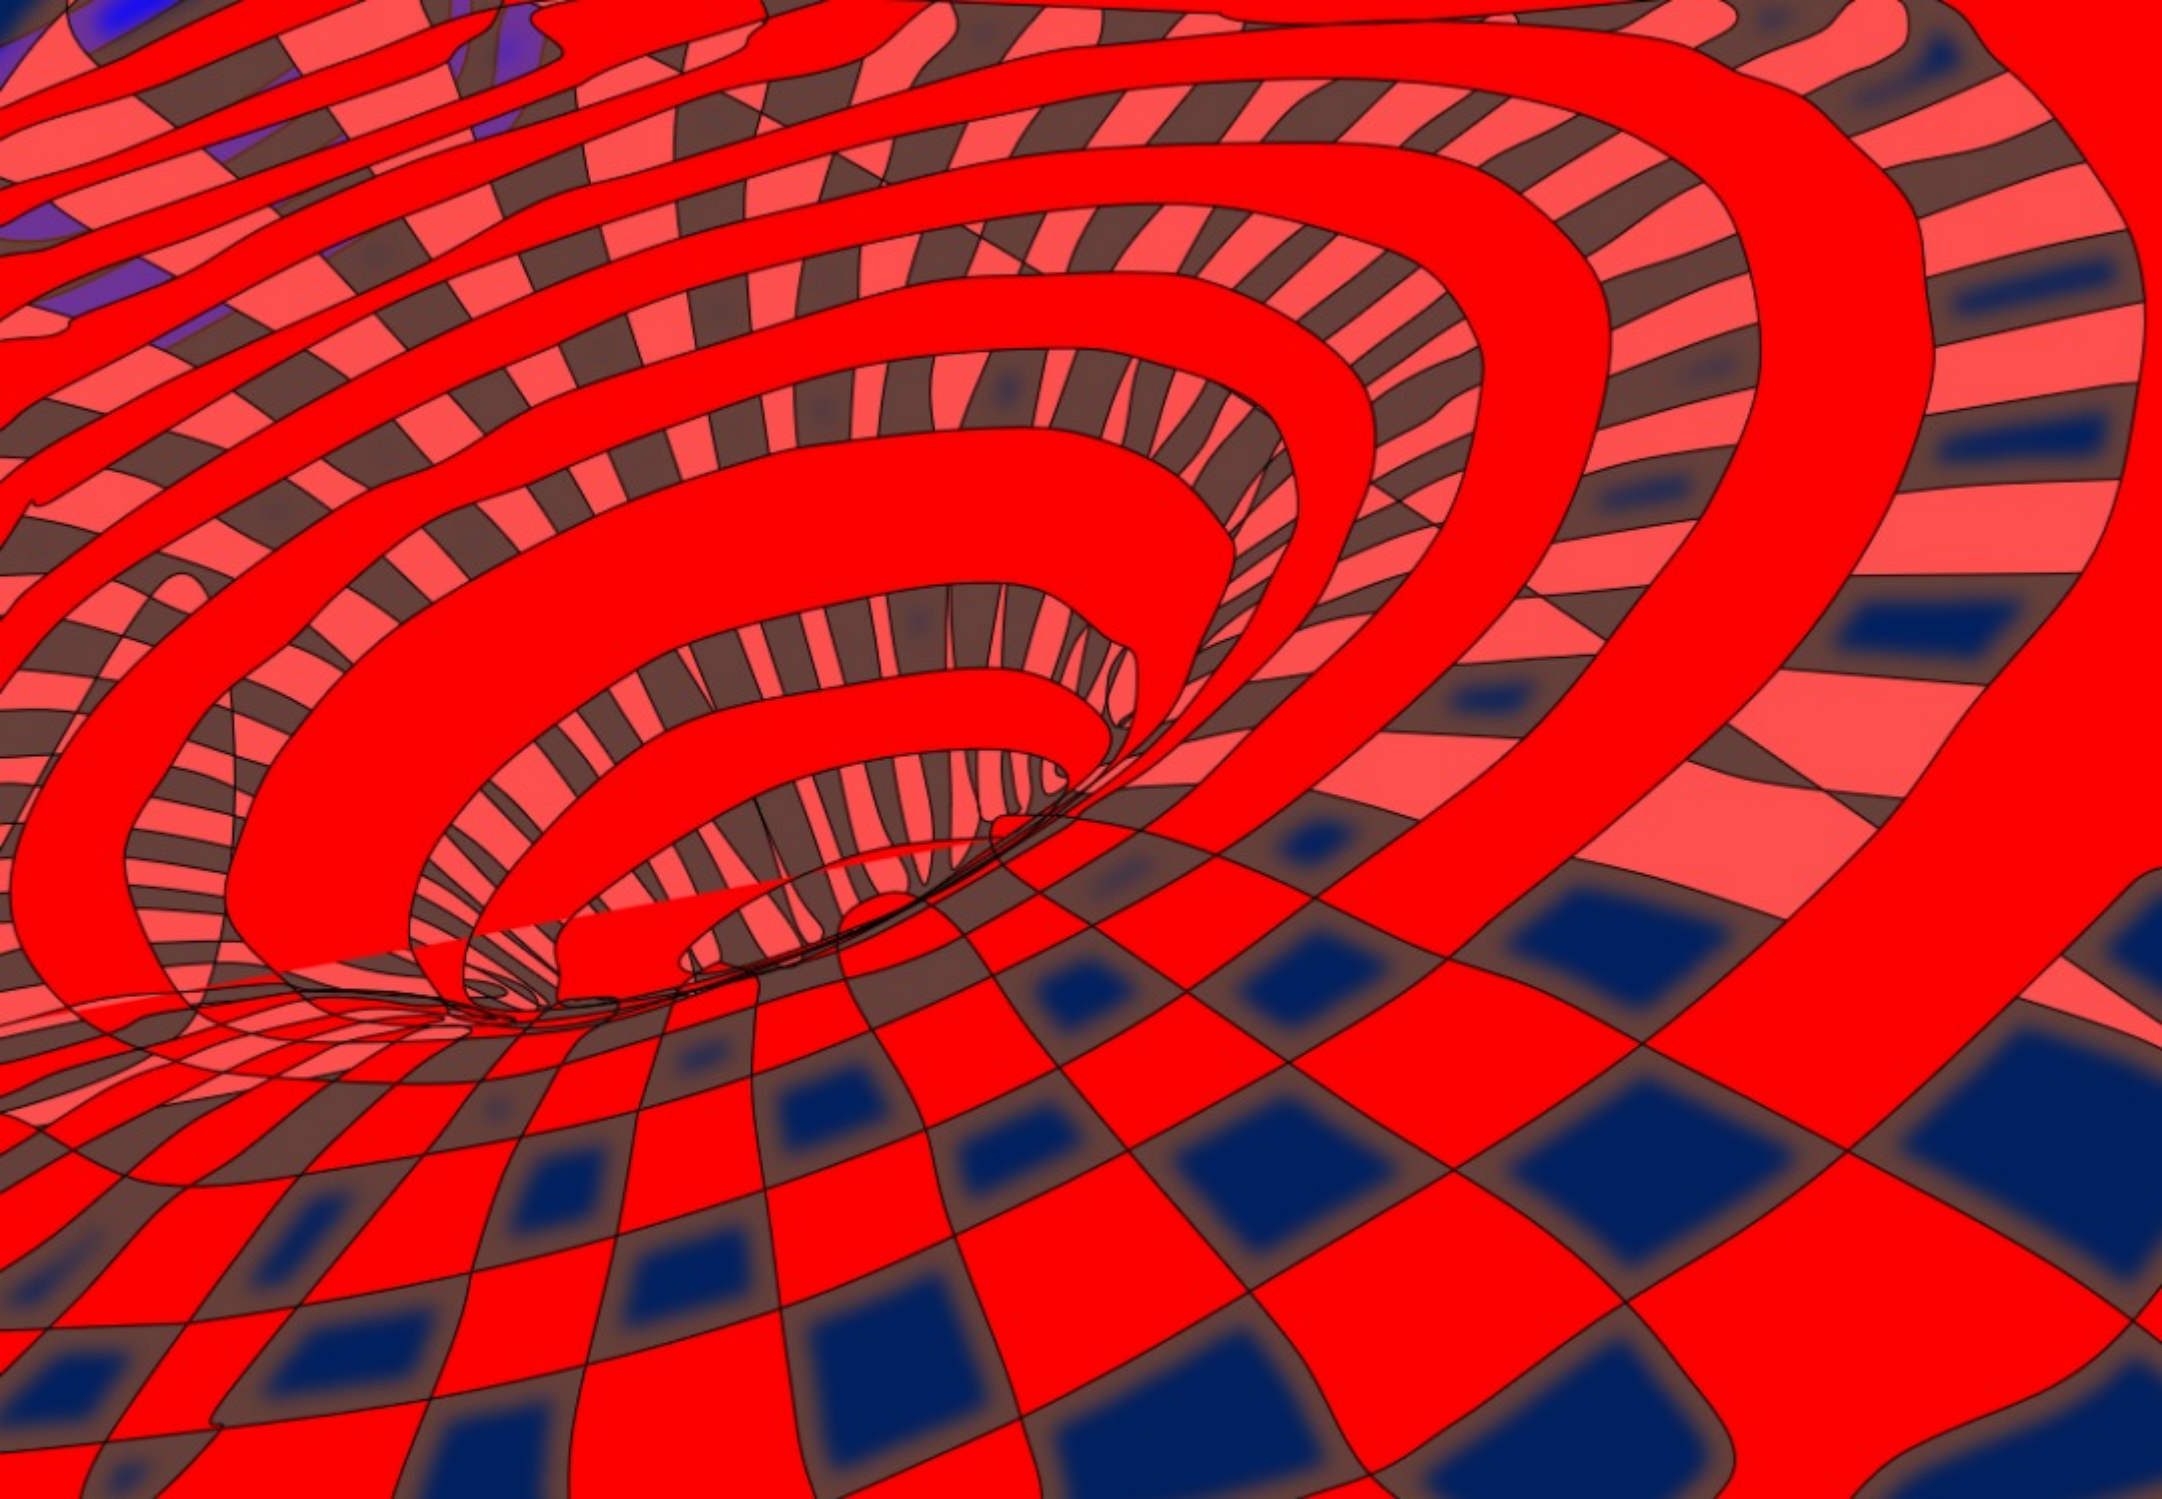

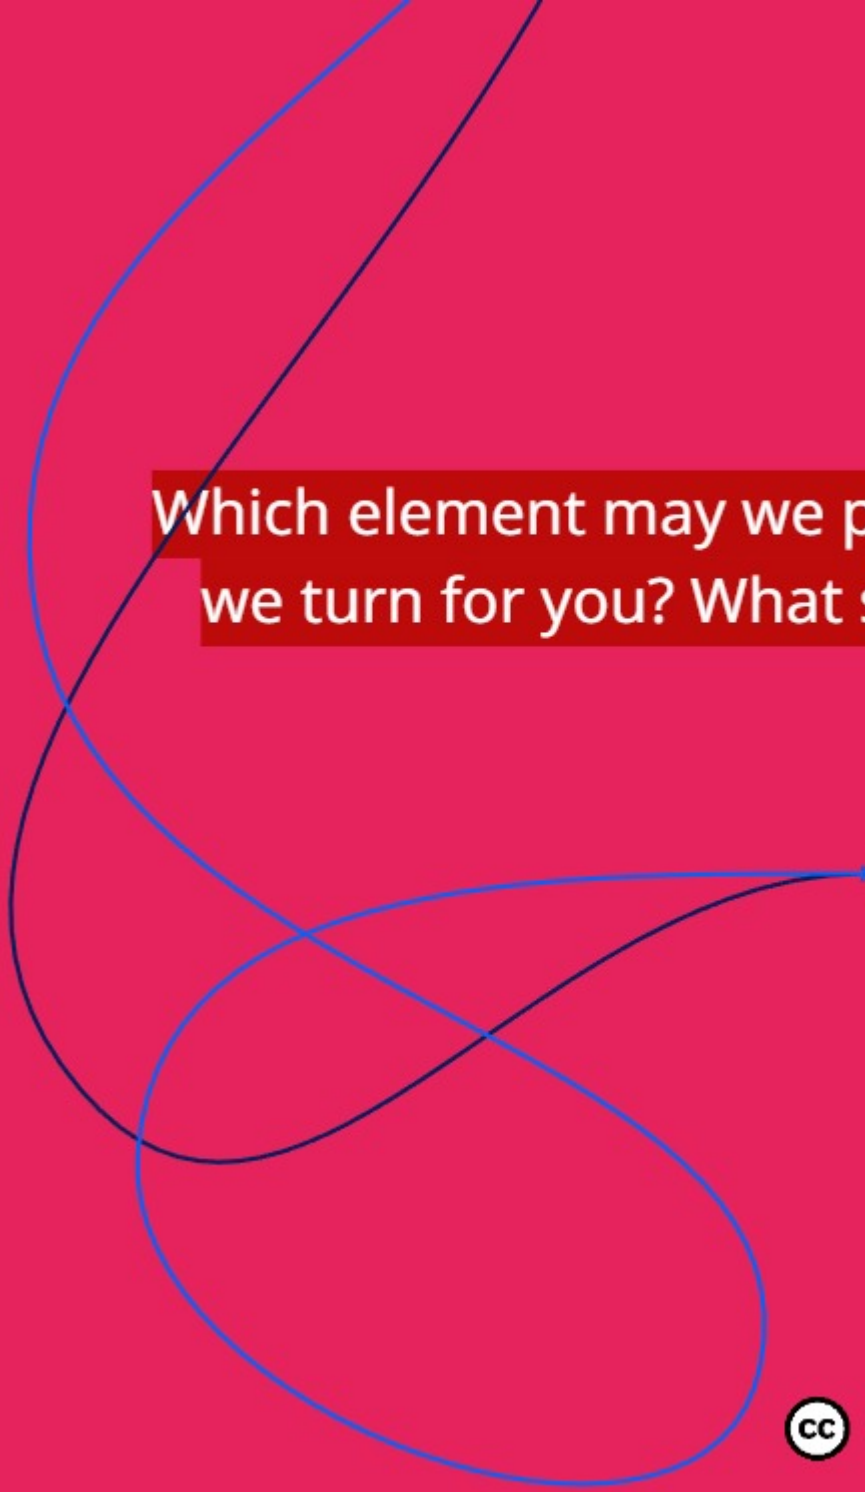

Following these principles, we have a local to international presence. Our crew is multi-talented and highly performing. Every team member is important and no one is a nameless employee in a faceless company. This crew does their best every day to be proud at the end of the day, while remaining present in their social environment of family and friends. Unbeatable hard skills are just as important here as excellent soft skills. We all need them, especially when dealing with sharks – a species that doesn't care about principles because it has regrowing teeth. But heart and intelligence are stronger than all jaws, which is why we continue to evolve upwards and the others, well, have to continue to grope in the dark.

If they do show themselves: we want to surf them and tickle their bellies while doing so – after all, sharks are only human too. This makes them feel comfortable, particularly tasty and: they jump out of the water onto our plates voluntarily.

Taming elements and sharks. What could be better?

Which element may we prepare for you? Which cogwheel may we turn for you? What shark recipe would you like to share with us?

All right. Because of questions. When we surf sharks, we have fun. But what if they are snappy at the wrong moment? My example: A deadline for customers is coming up. The hair hasn't seen a hairdresser for a while, wearing a cap in the office and to sleep, wildness. Three coffees on the way to the keyboard. We are capable of catching rabbits in the park with our bare hands. It's better to avoid wearing fake fur in nearby green spaces now and looking cute. And that applies on land. In the water, it's enough to just give a sharp glance. Guess what happens when we use our hands. I've heard of fluffy sharks who only whisper the name of this company.

This is not a fun time, indeed. This is, when we are having the time of our lives!
